Ouster of K Linked To Discovery of Spy

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 — The township of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev is linked to Russian discovery of Soviet spy Oleg Penkovsky, Greville Wynne, Penkovsky's Western contact, believes.

"It seems to me there is a very strong connection between Khrushchev's ouster and the Penkovsky case," Wynne said in an interview.

Hatred of Khrushchev and his policies and entourage was a strong motivating factor in Penkovsky's decision to spy for the West, Wynne, a British businessman, pointed out.

HE SAID that Penkovsky's disclosures to British and American intelligence of Khrushchev intentions in the 1961 Berlin crisis and 1962 Cuba missile crisis reflected the feelings of many highly placed Soviet officials against the former leader.

Wynne also said the service to the West provided by Penkovsky is being carried on by others like him inside the Kremlin today. "There are certainly many more," he said.

"Penkovsky was not the only one. You'd never have heard about him if he hadn't been caught. Unless they are caught, you won't hear of the others either."

Publication of details about Soviet spies and alleged sordid private activities of high Russian leaders will result in a new shakeup in Moscow, he predicts.

"IT SEEMS to me a lot more people are going to lose their jobs now," he said. "I could give you a few Moscow addresses where I would like to see copies of the Penkovsky papers sent."

Wynne branded as "nonsense" statements in Time magazine and other publications implying doubts about the authenticity of the papers, or suggesting that the U. S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) had arranged their publication.

He said CIA officials "seemed annoyed" about the forthcoming book when they questioned him last summer about how the papers got out of Russia. He said he had nothing to do with the transmittal.

Wynne said he immediately recognized Penkovsky's material when editor Frank Gibney showed him the papers, however.
